Another ambient pad loop that is sort of like Spyro 2 homeworld music. This one is fitting for an underwater world of some sort.

Sorry to be nitpicky, is this original content? Or is it from the " Distorted Reality " sample pack you mentioned in another post?

This suggests both things can't be true. isaiah658, having a copy of the Distorted Reality CD- or the subsequent release of Spectrasonic's Omnisphere software- is using the samples as intended to create music tracks that he can release under whatever license he chooses.

- If the samples were being shared individually, unmixed, that may be an issue.
- If isaiah658 didn't posess a legitimate copy of the samples, that may be an issue.
- If these tracks are faithful reproductions of songs (NOT unique music featuring the same samples) found in other commercial works such as Spiro, that may be an issue.

Are any of those things the case here?

Yes, this is original content. This sound is based off of my submission here https://opengameart.org/content/ambient-relaxing-loop. That submission was made using only ZynAddSubFX and Audacity. I even included the preset file in that submission. Because that sound was generated using a synthesizer, I kept tweaking the settings of that sound until I got something similar yet different. I did have to use quite a bit of effects/filters in Audacity for this sound so I opted not to share a the ZynAddSubFX preset file as it wouldn't be very useful.

I do not own nor do I use any sample packs or synthesizers from Spectrasonics. I only mention the Distorted Reality sample packs so people understand the inspiration and context of how these sounds could be used in games. I'm a bit flattered though that you think these are from the sample pack. That was the entire goal with these sounds. They sound like they could belong in such a pack but are completely free and made with a single open source synthesizer (ZynAddSubFX).

@MedicineStorm

It's even simpler than that. None of the sounds orginate from the Distorted Reality sample pack nor Spectrasonic's Omnisphere. They are made using only ZynAddSubFX and sometimes further modified in Audacity. I only mention the Distorted Reality sample packs so people understand the inspiration and context of how these sounds could be used in games.
